First Money and the Torch for a Year for Old Eureka.

Two small boys stood on Lowell common Thursday afternoon. One of them, pointing, exclaimed: "My! But what a homely little tub!" Whereupon the other replied: "Yes, but she may win first prize all the same."—and she did. To the unbounded delight of every live and loyal citizen of Arlington, and to the irrepressible jubilation of every one of the Eureka boys, Old Eureka has outdone even her uniformly good record. The satisfaction is all the more keen that the test was a fair and square one, in weather uniform to all, and against practically all of the best tubs in the New England league. Leaving Arlington by special train, at 7.30 in the morning, Eureka and her boys arrived in Lowell in time for the big parade which they joined, 75 strong. Afterwards, she was drawn back to the common, where was the scene of a former triumph, for in 1857 Eureka won second place with a vertical play of nearly 150 feet. But Thursday the boys were determined and Eureka was fit, a combination which was invincible. The Red Jackets, and Nonantums, and Hancock and Butlers, and all the most respected competitors were accordingly distanced by that same "homely little tub," which has made so enviable a record. First money, $200 in gold, and the coveted torch, held for two years by the Reds, came home in Capt. Peirce's hands, therefore, as also did an additional sum of $40, presented by Theodore and George Schwamb, jointly. The second prize went to the Torrents, 218-0 1-4; third to the Butlers, 216-1 1-8; and the fourth to Uncle Sam, 215-4 1-4. The schedule of the playoff follows:

Winnisimmet, Chelsea, 180.06 1-2; Tekosnow, Woonsocket, 174.10 1-2; City of Homes, Springfield, 203; Tremont, Roxbury, 176.07 3-4; Gaspee, Providence, 180.01 1-4; Volunteer, Central Falls, 199.07 1-4; Eagle, Lynn, not here; Watch City, Waltham, 200.03 1-4; Protector, Brockton, 182.03; Hancock, Brockton, 212.10; Nonantum, Newton, 200.08 1-4; Boston, Boston, 156.01; Columbia, New Bedford, 189.09 1-2; Neptune, Marblehead, 162.11; Tiger, Newburyport, 171.11 1-2; Vixen, Lowell, 188.19 1-2; Butler Vet., Lowell, 216.01 1-8; City of Somerville, Somerville, 194.08 3-4; Chicopee, Chicopee, 206.03 1-4; Concord, Concord, N. H., 186.11; Warren, Pepperell, 209.11 1-2; City of Lawrence, Lawrence, 186.04; White Angel, Salem, 191.11 1-4; Deluge, Lowell, 119.08 1-4; Washington, Revere, 189.05; Red Jackets, Cambridge, 210; Gen. Taylor, Everett, 200.03 1-4; Alabama Coon, Stoughton, 181.11; Neptune, Newburyport, 197.08 1-2; Phoenix, Marblehead, 188.01 3-4; Baw Beese, Gardner, 185.10 3-4; Eureka, Arlington, 219.06 3-4; Hingham, Hingham, 192.03 1-2; Charlestown, Charlestown, 190.08 3-4; Gulf Stream, Fall River, 192.04 1-2; City of Lynn, Lynn, 179.01 1-2; Torrents, Gardner, 218.00 1-4; Liberty, Chelsea, 203.06; King Phillip, Rockland, 180.02 1-2; Active, Weymouth, 178.09 1-2; Defiance, Fall River, 186.07; Uncle Sam, Manchester, 215.04 1-4; *Columbia, Winchendon, did not play; Haycart, Pawtucket, 192.01 1-4; J. W. Plalsted, Portland, 175.08 1-2; Malden, Malden, 195.07 1-2.

*Packing blew out of the tub. After the contest was over, victorious Eureka was drawn by her jubilant crew through the streets of Lowell, cheered, everywhere by everybody. With the fifes and drums at the head of the line, plenty of brooms, and plenty of good feeling all about, the march became a well-deserved triumph. But the reception accorded them at home, after the special had brought them, tired and hot, but as enthusiastic as ever, was best of all. Fireworks and cheers and hand-shakes and claps upon the back were expressive of the general feeling. Nothing was too much, and the News agency's stock of fireworks was depleted to prove it. The silver torch is on exhibition in the News agency's windows, and here's hoping it will be again next year. Bully for Old Eureka!

WEDDING BELLS.

Miss Margaret Georgiana Doherty of Belknap street, Arlington, and Peter Frank Cormier of Boston, were married Tuesday evening at the home of the Park Avenue church. The bride was gown in white silk muslin, and carried a bouquet of bride roses. The bridesmaid, Miss Margaret Henderson of Arlington, and the maid of honor, Miss Lemary of Boston, wore gray silk muslin; Mr. Nickerson of Dorchester was best man. The double ring service was used. The presents were numerous and valuable, among which were generous remembrances from the central telephone office, Arlington. A reception followed the marriage service, and supper was served. The bride and groom were the recipients of many congratulations and good wishes. Arlington, distinguished for her pretty brides, seldom if ever gave away so sweet and pretty a bride as was Miss Doherty. Mr. and Mrs. Cormier after their wedding trip will go to their new home on Huntington avenue.

At a meeting of the board of selectmen, July 21, the petition of the West End street railway company for a location on Trapelo road from the track of the Boston and Maine to the Waltham line was granted. Ultimately there is to be a double track road, but one track must be laid and in operation by Jan. 1, 1903. The other track will not be laid until the grade crossing at Waverley is abolished. It is expected that work will be begun as soon as repair work, now in process, through Cambridge, is completed.

NEW ENGLAND LAKES.

And Their Surrounding Shores.

Cool and balmy breezes, combined with the pure atmosphere of the country in the depths of a New England forest, with no disturbance save the soft ripple of the flowing brook or the low rumble of the lolling waves, such are the attributes of the region around New England's lakes.

Especially is this so of lakes Sunapee and Winnepesaukee, whose delightful situation with neighboring green valleys, broad forest borders, and lofty protecting mountain peaks, makes them two of the most popular lake resorts in New England. But they are not alone in their beauty, for the nearby state of Vermont boasts of the historic Champlain and the beautiful Memphremagog, and the lake-dotted surface of the state of Maine is rivalled for beauty only by her own magnificent sea coast.

The lake sections are the portions of New England where the seeker after quiet, and the ardent sportsman find a real pleasure in spending their summer months in fishing, boating and bathing in the cool waters of the lakes.

The Boston & Maine general passenger department, Boston, publishes a descriptive book called "Lakes and Streams," giving a good idea of the beauties of New England lakes and rivers, and a magnificent portfolio of photographic views of "New England Lakes," also descriptive books of "Lake Sunapee" and "Lake Memphremagog."

The descriptive books will be mailed to any address upon receipt of two cents in stamps for each book, and the portfolio upon receipt of six cents in stamps.

A boy who disappeared from Roxbury fifty years ago died recently the king of cannibal islands, the Marquesas, in the Southern Pacific. A whaling ship on which he had taken passage was wrecked on one of these islands, and the castaway survived to become the king. It is given to few men to realize to such an extent the ambitions of their childhood.

Mary Dudley's Answer.

DICK JERRAM presented himself at the office of Carrington Brothers in no very sanguine frame of mind. He still felt that Boer bullet in his right leg, and his complexion, as well as his nerves, reminded him of the enteric, which had brought him near to death's door. Worst of all was the news from Nellerton.

Mary Dudley—his Mary—had inherited £20,000 from her Uncle Harold, and—of that letter of the rattletongue gossip, Miss Brayslaw, to his mother was to be believed, Mary was on the highroad to a title. Sir Tarver Brown was very little other than a baronet, but the attraction of a "ladyship" could hardly help tempting even such a girl as sweet Mary Dudley.

The younger member of the firm received Dick with sympathy, but no enthusiasm.

"You don't look fit for an office desk, Mr. Jerram—oh, I beg your pardon, Lieutenant Jerram, isn't it, now?" he said with a slight laugh.

"I was offered a commission, but I did not feel that I could accept it, sir," said Dick. "I want to take up my work again—for various reasons."

Ernest Carrington's eyebrows rose and subsided.

"I am very sorry, Mr. Jerram," he said, "but just at present there is no vacancy. We will, of course, give you the first chance—the very first chance that occurs."

"Do you really mean it?" he asked, faintly.

"My dear fellow, you really are not fit for office work just yet. Take a holiday after your trying labors—your noble and—er—patriotic self-sacrifice. I dare say, in a few months, at the most, we can squeeze you in somewhere, though I fear even then we cannot offer you the same salary you received in 1899."

With an effort Dick pulled himself together, and stood up, like the disciplined if damaged soldier he had become.

"Your words are final, sir?" he asked.

"Provisional, Jerram—only provisional. But we can't afford to cheer you with hopes that may not come to fruition. Anything we can do in the way of recommendations, it will give us the utmost pleasure to do. Of course, you understand that? Good heavens! it is the least we could do!"

Dick bowed his head. The smile on his lips was just a little bitter.

"Quite so," he said. "It is something to be grateful for that you are willing to do the least possible. Good morning." And then Dick found himself in St. Paul's Churchyard, and conscious that the last straw had been piled upon his head.

Mary as good as lost to him—more certainly now than before, anyway—his situation filled up, his health broken, and no one to whom he could honorably look for help in his time of trouble.

He found comfort in the recollection that his mother's own poor little income of a hundred a year was sufficient for her well measured requirements.

"As for me—"

He shrugged his shoulders and tottered down Ludgate Hill. On his way he noticed a jeweler's window, with watches and chains and pins and rings of price beneath his eyes—especially rings. And the rings reminded him of what it hurt him most to remember.

He looked at his left hand, with the plain but solid gold circlet, set with a tiny diamond, and the words, "Forever and forever!"

That was Mary's voucher to him for her life-long love.

His fingernails closed on his palms tightly, his jaws locked as if they meant never again to part, and he drew two or three terrible breaths of the kind that mark crises in the life of a man.

At length he moved again. "Yes, that's what I'll do," he murmured. "Poor girl! one can't blame her. She shall marry him with a free conscience at all events."

Then once again he whispered:

"As for me—"

But he did not ever shrug his shoulders this time. His despair was too profound. It needed no emphasis.

At the King's Arm Inn, of Nellerton, that evening, Dick took pen and paper, and wrote the letter to Mary which was to accompany the returned ring. It was short and to the point:

"Dear Mary—Somehow, though I would like to keep this, I can't do it, and so I bring it back to you; and you must think I mean to be nasty by making it come to you on your birthday. I quite understand that things are changed between us. Wishing you all the happiness life can give you, believe me, sincerely yours all ways, RICHARD JERRAM."

"No drive in that, I think," he said, with a pang of pride when he had read it and folded it up. The ring was in a little box, and the letter was now wrapped round the box. The whole was addressed to Miss Mary Dudley, 2 Devonshire Road.

In the darkness he tottered out Devonshire Road way. He gazed at the house and the lighted window of Mary's bedroom—gazed and gazed till he felt silly. He lay restlessly, now wishing wildly, now dumbly resigned to all things. Once it occurred to him to wonder what the maid of the inn meant by smiling like that when she gave him his candle, and said a gay

"Good-night." But he had far intenser stimulants to thought than that, and the damsel soon drifted away from him.

His most strenuous moments followed the realization that he had been casual enough to leave Mary's packet downstairs on the mantelpiece in the little parlour.

"Shows what I am!" he said fiercely, as he made an attempt to get up, light a candle and go down for it.

But he found the effort quite appallingly severe, and gave it up.

He dozed deliciously, played with Mary in boy-and-girl fashion, danced with her, had her all to himself in the Brackshaw Woods, wooed and won her all over again. Off and on he woke, to gasp and groan and utter exclamations. The Pretoria nurses would have interpreted those exclamations aright, but he was alone now, and had worse tomes after each bout of them.

For the second time the girl knocked at his door.

"Your hot water, sir," she cried, and set her ear to listen.

She did not listen long, but hurried downstairs, with word for the master that the gentleman in No. 3 was shouting in the queerest way.

"I think he's ill, sir," she said. "He looked bad last night."

The landlord made no bones about entering Dick's room when he, too, had rapped to no purpose. He gazed at Dick for a few moments, and felt his blood chill a little at Dick's furious cry: "I tell you you are dead, Mary, so don't deny it!" touched Dick's burning forehead, and left him.

"He's in a fever—that's what's the matter with him," he said. "You just go for Mr. Barker, Jane, right away."

"Poor young fellow!" said Jane eagerly. "That I will, sir."

Moreover, being in love herself, she determined to kill two birds with one stone.

"It's maybe a present for Miss Dudley," she said to herself. And, putting on her hat, carried off Dick's little packet for No. 2 Devonshire Road. ***

"Nurse!"

The darkness had passed from Dick's brain, and, having opened his eyes and seen things as they were, though with an imperfect grasp of the facts, he whispered the monosyllable.

The quick rustle of a dress answered him and the words:

"Yes, my dear boy."

"You, mother?" said Dick, looking up at the face that was the best and truest object in life for him.

She clasped his hand—a bony shape, loosely laced with skin.

Suddenly the cloud fell upon him.

It all came back—wound, fever, the long weeks in hospital, the voyage home in weakness and anxiety as well as hope, the news of Mary's fortune and Sir Tarver Brown, his rebuff in St. Paul's Churchyard and his journey to Nellerton.

He groaned, in spite of himself, and turned his face to the wall.

"Now, then, dear, let me raise your head."

"What's the use?" he murmured. "It was his one and only flash of peevishness. The next instant he obeyed orders, with a smile. It was a dreary smile, yet a smile."

"How I must have worried you, mother!" he said quietly, as he settled after the tonic. "I suppose this is Nellerton?"

She kissed him as mothers do kiss their grown sons of whom they are very proud.

"Try and sleep again, dear," she said, rather tremulously.

But Mary Dudley and her infidelity—her excusable infidelity—were vivid in his mind. How could he sleep amid such realizations?

"All right," he said, shutting his eyes.

Then a sunny gray mist settled upon his brain, and his surroundings were to him as if they were not. It was not so much sleep as translation of spirit.

"Oh, Mary, Mary, what shall I do without you?" his lips cried aloud, even while his mind was active in some remoter atmosphere.

"Nothing, dear Dick, you shall not do without me as long as we live, for we will be always together." A hand was laid on his forehead—a little satiny hand, with love warm in all its pores. And instantly Dick opened his eyes.

"Mary!" he gasped.

This time Mary Dudley laid her face by his on the pillow, smiling, and whispered, with her mouth close to his mouth:

"Of course, Dick, who else should it be?"

But it was not until the evening that she was allowed to give him in full measure the only tonic that could be warranted able to make him himself again in spirit and in truth. Then she did not spare him.

"I ought to feel ashamed of you, Dick," she explained, "for supposing, if only for a second, that I could care anything for my money apart from you? Sir Tarver Brown, indeed! Why, I was just waiting for a sign from you. And I got it—my own ring! Oh, Dick!"—Chicago Record-Herald.

Salisbury as Editor.

A letter of Lord Salisbury's, written when he was Lord Robert Cecil, to Abraham Hayward, was sold the other day in London. In it the future Prime Minister wrote that "a new review has been projected, of which I am one of the editors; and, knowing how valuable your co-operation has been to the other reviews, I venture to ask you whether you have the leisure, or, if the leisure, the inclination occasionally to contribute to this new one. Its main object is to supply the liveliness which has been so painfully lacking lately in the elderly quarterlies without the startling peculiarities on the subject of religion which have stood so much in the way of the new ones."

NANTASKET POINT.

When visiting Nantasket Beach don't fail to call and see D. O. Wade at Nantasket Point and get one of his famous shore dinners. It is the best dinner that is served at the beach and only costs fifty cents. Mr. Wade is the oldest hotel keeper at Nantasket and still holds the reputation he made many years ago of getting up the best fish and clam dinner on the southeastern coast of Massachusetts. Owing to the state taking his property at Nantasket proper Messrs D. O. Wade, C. G. Grant and several well known citizens of Hull have purchased Nantasket Point and have built a first class hotel with large veranda seating several hundred, also giant roller coaster, the largest in the world. Flying horses and the finest dancing pavilion on the beach there are many other attractions such as shooting galleries, theatres, etc.

Mr. Al Boyden of Roxbury is building an automobile race track and see-saw diving bell which is new to the beaches of the east and only a stone's throw from D. O. Wade's hotel.

If you are looking for a day's outing with a first-class dinner take steamer Harlem from 400 Atlantic avenue, near Rowe's wharf elevated station, fare 25 cents for the round trip and enjoy an outing at Nantasket Point.

The breeding of innumerable hosts of dragon flies, or devil's darning needles, as they are called by boys in some parts of the United States, in order that these insects may extirpate the mosquitoes, is now advocated in certain quarters. Are we to have dragon fly stock farms, with annual sales of weanlings of the choicest pedigrees? Alas, it is to be feared that, no matter what we do, we shall have the mosquitoes always with us, like the poor. Nevertheless, the swarms of these pests can undoubtedly be lessened in numbers and in the evil which they work,

A Smart Cape.

A smart shoulder cape is made with a yoke of black silk guipure over heliotrope glass silk, bordered with four three-inch frills of glass silk on a foundation of spotted net, with frills of silk at the ends and half way between.

Pretty Piques For Children.

Pretty pique gowns for children are made with one or two simple ruffles, one around the low-cut bodice, made to wear with a guimpe, and others around sleeves and skirt, finished with a simple edge and sometimes a small figure of embroidery.

Cool Collar Bands.

Cool collar bands for hot weather are quickly and easily made by the clever needlewoman. Bias bands (or rather French folds) of lawn in white or colors, joined by rows of gaffing in mercerized cotton, are pretty and easily made, if the bands are first basted on a paper pattern the correct size. Tucked lawn, with or without lace, makes attractive collars, while those made entirely of rows of lace insertion, slightly shaped and wired at the sides, are very cool and dainty.

Women and Athletics.

The universally increasing attention now being given, especially in Anglo-Saxon countries, to out-of-door sports and to physical culture is a sign of the best omen. No class can have a greater solicitude for the furtherance of this movement than the artists, for they cannot create beautiful forms without having beautiful forms around them from which to draw inspiration. The art of a nation is but the mirror of that nation's ideals, and faithfully reflects their slightest change. This new conception of the value of athletics will add dignity, interest and standing, making it a factor second to none in the development of our civilization. It will be a mighty influence in the creation of a new and superior type of men and women. That women are growing more and more to realize this is evidenced by the athletic tendency of the modern girl. If she will combine therewith an intelligent effort after well-balanced and harmonious development, the results are bound to be satisfying in the extreme, for in many ways the female body is quicker than the male to respond to training.—R. Hinton Perry, in Outing.

Will Explore Central Africa.

Mrs. Emma Shaw Colcleugh, of Providence, R. I., who will spend the summer exploring central Africa, has achieved a reputation in the triple lines of travel, journalism and lecturing.

Her first long trip was made to Alaska in 1884, and she visited that country again in 1885 and in 1889, exploring the Canadian shores of the great lakes on her last trip. Through the courtesy of the Hudson Bay Company she visited the Klondike while interest in that region was keenest.

She has made trips to Hawaii and the South Sea Islands, and spent months in Cuba and Porto Rico shortly after the war, investigating the relief work and social conditions. The National Geographical Society has recently recognized her accomplishments as an explorer by creating her one of its members. Mrs. Colcleugh goes to Africa for purposes of research and also to secure material for a series of lectures. From Zanzibar she will proceed to Mombasa, the coast terminus of the lately completed Uganda Railway. She will go over the entire length of this railway to Lake Victoria Nyanza, making short excursions along the line, and will probably take a caravan trip still further into the heart of equatorial Africa.

Summer Clothes For Babies.

These are the days when the up-to-date baby may be found in the shops intent on the selections of its summer wardrobe. And quite as much taste and care are involved in the picking out of a proper cap, for instance, for the wee morsel of fashionable humanity as the grownup belle of the household expends in the selection of her summer chapeau.

A cap which a baby of the daintiest kind of taste would be pleased to wear is of pink chiffon mounted on pink China silk. The chiffon is laid in shirred ruffles—all very narrow—over the entire cap. The front of the cap is becomingly finished with a four-inch wide pleated pink satin baby ribbon, which casts a faintly roseate shade over the dimpled little face. Inside the ruffle, framing the face, is thickly pleated the pink chiffon, one-inch wide.

The cap is finished with a short cape of the chiffon, box pleated, and edged with the shirred baby ribbon. Perched like a butterfly on the top of the cap is a chic bow of two-inch wide pink satin taffeta ribbon, and a rosette of the same delicately tinted ribbon nestles among the fluffy folds of the ruffle at the left side of the cap in front. A twist of satin ribbon binds the ruffle around the face and the top of the cape, and forms the wide tie.

Mothers of Little Wage-Earners.

A woman brought her little girl to the Board of Health to file an application for her to go to work during vacation. She was angered and dismayed when she saw the hundred ahead of her, although she had made an early start and was there by nine o'clock. Beside the girl, who scarcely looked the twelve years her mother claimed for her, there were three little ones, the least a babe in arms, and a boy was away selling papers. The woman grumbled and the children grew hungry and fretful as time passed on. She berated the policeman and pulled the children about. At last she said to the girl who was to make the application, "Now, you keep the place in line and I'll get a bit of a rest." Thereupon she sat down upon the curbstone and gave the baby its dinner. It stopped crying then, and presently slept. The woman's eyes, too, began to grow heavy, then she nodded, and in a little while she was asleep. She woke with an angry start when the little girl grabbed her by the arm, exclaiming, "They pushed me out of my place; I've lost it." The little children clung to the woman's skirts as she tried to break into the ranks. Those that had places kept her out, looking at her with hostile glances. "I will get in; I've got the right!" she shouted. "Here, keep quiet," said a policeman, coming up to her. "I won't; they've crowded me out." "Well, it's no good for any one to be in line now," said the officer. "There go the doors shut; you'll have to come back to-morrow." "What!" shrieked the woman, and only the babel of other disappointed voices drowned her imprecations as the crowds surged angrily about.—New York Press.

THE OLD COUPLE.

Over the soft young grass
I saw the old couple pass.

Slowly they walked and stood
Close to the budding wood.

Surely it seemed they were stung
By the thought of how fair and young

The whole earth looked beside
A gray old bridegroom and bride.

No! for the flowering mold
Beneath them was centuries old;

The skies that smiled above
Were old as Eden and love;

And of all the forest trees
In the woodland families,

The oldest were most fair
And wore the happiest air.

The aged stars in the blue
In the beauty of spring were new,

And the aged hearts in the wood
By the spirit of spring were renewed.

—Ethelwyn Wetherald, in Good Housekeeping.

An Estimate Reversed.

It was a hot afternoon—a very hot August afternoon. The passersby walked with great deliberation. Some of them carried umbrellas. Others carried their coats or hats. There were not many of them altogether.

Randall Clark, in his cool gray serge, his canvas shoes and his light straw hat, passed his fellow pedestrians with a somewhat jaunty stride. He didn't carry an umbrella and he didn't carry his coat. In fact, he felt the heat but little. He had experienced some rough service under a much more ardent sun, and, in marked contrast to the people sweltering about him, he kept his mind off the temperature and permitted no thermometer reading to increase his personal warmth.

He walked along idly, and yet with a certain briskness of gait that seemed to indicate an object in view. But he had no object beyond the desire to secure a chance to exercise his thoughts without fear of distractions. This was a favorite occupation of Randall's. He found he could think to much better advantage when strolling along. Just now he was thinking hard on the matrimonial problem. For seven-and-twenty years he had escaped this worry. Now he was its victim.

That he was in love admitted of little question; but he felt he had himself well in hand and with power to withdraw from temptation if need be. The question was, should he withdraw, or should he continue to bask in the singeing flame of Miss Emily Tabor's eyes, and presently, when opportunity came, put his fate to the momentous test?

He told himself that Emily Tabor was a beautiful girl, a refined and highly intelligent girl, a girl of charming tastes and many accomplishments. But did she have a heart, and was it the sort of heart that is quick in sympathy and faithful in love? Was it, in fact, a pulsing, human heart, or was it merely an anatomical necessity? Randall feared it was of the latter genus. She was so cold, so statuesque, so perfect—such a calm and almost imperious product of the school of finishing which her social class so greatly admired.

Randall doubted if he could be happy with her. She was his ideal in everything save human sympathies. These he feared she was quite lacking.

He took a coin from his pocket and held it between his thumb and forefinger as he strode along.

"Heads, I go; tails, I stay," he said and flipped the coin into the air. He caught it in his open palm.

"Heads," he murmured, and slipped it back into his pocket.

He was striding up the avenue now and there were very few pedestrians in sight. He would go on and stop at Jack Manning's home and leave a note saying he had decided to go with him on that long trip among the Florida lakes.

Then he stopped. There was a baby carriage, a dainty affair of wicker, curves and open work, standing close to the fence. It was the face of the baby that stopped him. The hot sun was shining directly upon it. It was red, very red, and the eyelids were half closed, with a strip of white eyeball showing beneath. Randall caught the handle of the carriage and quickly turned it into the limited strip of shade beneath the trees. He saw that the child was overcome by the heat and that something must be done for it immediately. He looked up and down the street. Nobody was in sight. He glanced along the row of houses. There was no sign of life about them. What should he do? Go to one of the big, front doors and ask for assistance, or hustle the child to the nearest drug store? He pushed the carriage along in the shade for a moment while he tried to think what it was best to do.

Then a light step sounded behind him. He turned quickly. It was Emily Tabor—Emily Tabor in all her snowy summer fineries. She did not smile at what might have seemed to some girls his ridiculous position. Her face was as grave as his own.

"What is it, Mr. Clark?" she quickly asked.

"Somebody left this baby to broil in the sun," he answered, "and I'm afraid it's ill."

"The poor little dear," murmured Emily Tabor, as she gave the child a hurried glance. Then she strengthened up and added: "Bring it right to my aunt's house, Mr. Clark. I'll hurry ahead and open the door."

She ran back to the second gate and then up the walk to the great entrance way. Randall turned the carriage and followed her as fast as he could. When he reached the porch he lifted the baby on its pillow in a careful, though somewhat clumsy, fashion and walked up the steps. Emily met him at the doorway with outstretched arms. He put the child in them.

"Come in this way," she said, and led him back to the library. "The maids are all out and so is auntie. But I've got a piece of ice here and some wet cloths." She gently laid the baby on the couch and knelt beside it.

"Break up the ice," she said. "Crush it as small as possible and make a compress out of it." He did as she told him and she put the ice to the child's head and pressed wet cloths to its face and tiny wrists.

"Wouldn't it be well to run for a doctor?" asked Randall.

"No," she answered, without looking around. "I want you here. I think I'm quite competent to handle the case. I've had some experience in practical nursing, you know." But he didn't know. Pull down the shade a little," she commanded. "And now take off my hat, please."

He was lucky enough to grasp the proper hat pins and a moment later tenderly laid the mass of gauze and ribbons on the table.

There was a short period of silence. Randall stood a little back of the girl and looked down at her as she knelt by the child. Then the stillness was broken by a querulous cry from the child.

"The dear is coming around nicely," said the girl. "What a pretty baby it is! There, there, sweetheart, everything is all right. Raise the shade, please, Mr. Clark."

When Randall turned back she had risen with the babe in her arms, its head pillowed on her breast. Then she walked slowly up and down the apartment humming a little lullaby, and presently as she sang the babe looked up in her face and smiled.

"Isn't it a dear?" murmured the girl with her face bent close to the child's. "Mamma," cooed the little one and put up its tiny hand and touched her cheek.

And Randall Clark, standing back a little, thought he had never seen a picture that would compare with it. And his heart swelled in his breast.

"Is there anything I can do?" he softly asked.

"Look at the pillow," she answered, "and see if there are any initials on the slip."

He bent over the lace-trimmed case and scanned it closely.

"The letters are 'L. R.' I think," he said. "They are a little obscure. If they are not 'L. R.' they are 'S. B.' or perhaps 'Y. P.' There are so many curly-cues about them, you know."

The girl paused a moment and considered.

"How stupid!" she suddenly cried. "Why didn't I guess it before? It's Lydia Robbins' little boy, of course. Why, he's just the image of Lydia."

"Idly, idly," cooed the babe.

"There, did you hear that?" cried Emily Tabor. "Isn't he sweet and bright?"

"M-m-mamma," gurgled the little fellow with a great display of red gums and scattered white teeth.

The girl bent quickly and kissed him, whereat he gurgled again, and, launching out wildly, caught a tress of the beautiful brown hair in his chubby fist.

"Please go to the telephone—in the hall, Mr. Clark," said the girl, "and call up Mrs. Robbins—Mrs. Coleman Robbins. Tell her that her Jamie is here and waiting to be called for. But don't alarm her."

"I'm afraid I shall do it clumsily," said Randall. But he obeyed.

She could hear the murmur of his voice for a little while and then he suddenly reappeared in the room. "I seem to have disturbed her dreadfully," he said "and I'm sure she doesn't believe a word I say. I think she imagines it's some kind of a plot to lure her away from home and then rob the house. Can't you speak to her, please?"

"Why, yes," said the girl, as she promptly proceeded to the 'phone. "There, put the receiver to my ear, please. Is this you, Lydia? Don't you know my voice? It's Emily Tabor. I'm at Aunt Gresham's. Yes, Jamie is here and he's all right. He was picked up on the street and brought in here. Deserter? Yes. No nurse in sight. He's all right I say. Yes, yes. Listen."

She held the baby close to the 'phone.

"Mamma," she murmured softly.

"Mamma," cooed the babe. "There, Lydia, did you hear that? Yes, of course he's a dear. Certainly. Come over and get your little man as soon as you please. Good-by."

Randall hung up the receiver.

"I think I'd better go," he said.

The girl laughed.

"That's true heroic modesty," she said. "You are afraid to face the gratitude of Lydia Robbins." Her voice grew grave. "She'll never know just how much she has to be grateful for," she softly added.

"To you," said Randall with equal gravity.

"This sounds like mutual admiration," laughed the girl again. "Besides, auntie would never forgive me if I didn't invite you to stay to dinner. She wants to meet you. Will you stay—that is, if you have no other engagement?"

"I have no other engagement," Randall briskly asserted as he settled himself in an easy chair.

She let the loose strands of her glorious brown hair brush the baby's dimpled cheek.

"I understood you were to go with Jack Manning on his long trip through the Florida interior," she softly said.

"Never had any such idea," said Randall Clark.—W. R. Rose in Cleveland Plain Dealer.

DIDN'T MISS AN ISSUE

But the Editor Had to Print His Paper on Cheap Handkerchiefs.

A rare thing in the newspaper line was shown to a Herald reporter by Mr. F. F. Powers, the local commercial agent of the Central of Georgia Railway. To speak by the card, it would be well to call the periodical a "news-cloth" instead of a newspaper, for the printing had been done on a cotton handkerchief, and why the handkerchief was used instead of the usual white paper is an interesting story which Mr. Powers relates.

During the winter of 1881 Mr. Powers was at Dead Rapids, S. D. The winter was one of the coldest in the history of the State, the blizzard raging for months, completely tearing up railroad traffic and keeping the folks a good deal indoors. Fuel and provisions ran low, especially the former, and wood sold as high as $25 per cord.

At Dell Rapids a paper was published, The Exponent, and it had an editor who was a hustler. He boasted that blizzard or no blizzard his paper should not miss an issue. The frigid weather knocked railroad traffic in the head, as stated, so it was with difficulty that the editor received the paper to print his publication on. Finally there came a day when the store of white paper gave out, so he went to printing on wrapping paper, but that also was exhausted in time. The editor was not to be daunted. He decided that he would try cloth, so he purchased about a couple of hundred cotton handkerchiefs and ran them through the press. As the result The Exponent came out printed on the handkerchiefs, perhaps the only periodical that was ever published that way. —Augusta (Ga.) Herald.

Uncle Sam's "Kissing Palm." Employees of the Agricultural Department solemnly swear that there is a "kissing palm" in the greenhouses of the department, and assert that, despite vigilance, it is impossible to keep young couples from throwing arms about each other's necks and kissing whenever they come within a radius of five feet of this wonderful plant.

It has remained for the department which unearthed the "kissing bug," the "cigarette bug" and the mosquito-devouring dragon fly to bring to this country this strangest of all plants.

Officially the palm is known as the palmetto osculari. It resembles in some respects a gigantic fern. It was brought to this country about a year ago from the wilds of Australia.

The story goes that as women clerks in the department visiting the greenhouse came within the influence of the palm, gardeners and other employees were astonished to see them throwing their arms about the necks of their friends and imprinting on their lips smacks which could be heard all over the greenhouse.

Secretary Wilson was incredulous, and at the invitation of Professor Ritue visited the greenhouse. He had hardly stepped inside when he could hardly resist kissing a young woman near by.—Philadelphia Record.

Aged Authors.

The Bookman has been getting together a list of authors who accomplished their most important work after reaching the age of fifty. Samuel Richardson, for instance, attained his success after passing that age. The first part of "Pamela" was written in two months of the winter of 1739-40, and published the latter year. Boswell had passed fifty when the work that made him immortal, "Life of Dr. Johnson," was published. After achieving this success he lived for only four years, and died sadly and ignominiously. Cervantes was fifty-eight when, in spite of his miseries, he found the opportunity for completing the first part of "Don Quixote." Daniel Defoe was fifty-eight years of age when he wrote "Robinson Crusoe," and at the same period of life John Locke produced his essay on the human understanding. Milton was fifty-nine when "Paradise Lost" was published. Samuel Johnson was sixty-eight when he began to write his "Lives of the Poets," which has been called the most masculine and massive body of criticism in the language.

Strength of Newgate Prison.

The housebreaker who undertakes to raze the famous London prison, Newgate, to the ground will have all his work cut out. Lieutenant Colonel Milman, who has been governor since 1886, is of opinion that it is the strongest built prison in the country. On one occasion, when a doorway had to be pierced through one of the inner walls, the work occupied nearly three weeks; indeed, so stout are the walls that they are almost strong enough to resist modern artillery. In the gloomy prison Colonel Milman has attended no fewer than twenty-five executions in sixteen years.

Poor, But Honest.

A writer on natural history, imbued with the usual fallacy that men should imitate the lower animals, points out the example set by lobsters. The young lobster naturally comes to the top of the water, but the very moment he reaches the age of discretion he sinks back to his ancestral home. In short, the young lobster, like the good young man, always "settles down" when he should.—London Globe.

JUST COMPLAINTS.

The complaints of bad odors emanating from the unloading of manure both at the Heights depot and at the ice houses on Spy pond are certainly justified. We have smelled some of those odors ourselves, and they are anything but sanitary. Some folks, even in the hottest weather, are unable to have a window or a door in their houses open, on account of the stench. Fertilizer is necessary, no one denies it, but Arlington is, or should be, too clean a town and too careful of its good name as a clean and healthful place of residence, to allow its precincts to be pervaded by noisome and unsanitary odors. The farm lands need the fertilizer, but there must be some way of bringing the fertilizer to them without detriment to the noses of the unoffending, and in very many cases tax-paying, citizens. And, furthermore, if there be no way at present, a way must be made.

THERE IS NO EXCUSE.

There is no reason why Arlington shouldn't have sent greetings to her children, and cordially invited them back again to the town during this Home Week. That Arlington is so near Boston, together with the fact that many of her people are away on their summer vacation affords no good reason why we might not have observed Home Week.

North Reading is near Boston, too, but she got many of her children together and had a jolly good time. Salem is not a long run from Boston, and yet she celebrated Home Week with an enthusiasm worthy of her history. All Massachusetts has been alive during this present week in exchanging "God bless you" with the returning children. But Arlington, the self-same Arlington, that so proudly boasts, on the return of every 19th of April, of her deeds in the War of the Revolution, couldn't so interest herself in Home Week as to invite any of her children back again, that they might exchange greetings, and refresh their memories with the valor shown by their fathers in forever making safe the home. So far as we can learn, not a single reference was made in any of our churches last Sunday to Home Week. This, however, is not a singular omission on the part of the churches, so long as all Arlington has shown herself so indifferent to what the state had so earnestly recommended and advised in this matter. Let us be honest with ourselves. We all love Arlington, and it is with reluctance that one says a word to her discredit. It goes, however, without saying that she has made a poor showing of herself this present Home Week in that she hasn't even asked for a single absent child of hers. Let us see if we can't awaken from our lethargic sleep in sufficient season next year, properly, to celebrate Home Week.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The stopping of teams near the drinking fountain where the horses can nose about the fountain and cups is reprehensible. The fountain before the town hall is for thirsty humans, not for horses. Please keep your horses at such distance that they cannot meddle with what does not belong to them.

Owners of dogs should at once conform to the law, and secure a license for them. There are a 100 dogs still unlicensed in Arlington. Remember that your dog must be licensed or shot. Which shall it be?

Why not read the editorials in the suburban or country newspaper, provided there are any, as well as the so-called news items measured by the yard?

Mr. Meyers, the janitor of Robbins library, deserves much credit for the care he takes of the grounds of the library.

ARLINGTON LOCALS.

Walter L. Whitten.

Walter L. Whitten, eldest child of Police Officer James E. Whitten, passed away at the home of his parents, 14 Prescott street, Sunday afternoon, last. For about two years he had been ill and for the past few months was daily growing weaker. Some months in the past two winters he had spent at his grandmother's home at Gardiner, Me., hoping to benefit by the change of climate and air. He was 18 years of age, having been born at Gardiner, Me., May 30, 1884. He attended the public schools in Arlington and afterwards for a short time, until his illness began, was employed by Dr. George W. Yale, in his dental office. He was a member of St. John's church and sang in the choir while in health. Until the last he was patient and most thoughtful of those who attended to his many needs.

The funeral services were held at the house Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock. In the absence of Rev. Mr. Yeames, the services were conducted by Rev. James Sheerin, assistant rector of St. James church, North Cambridge. The musical part of the service was sung by members of St. John's choir. There were many beautiful floral offerings.

Mrs. George Tobey, who died last Monday of pneumonia and blood poisoning, was a member of the Baptist church. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Sylvester Frost. She leaves a husband and a baby three weeks old. Mrs. Tobey was a woman much beloved by all who knew her. Amiable in her ways, she had drawn to herself many friends. The sympathy of this entire community goes out to the sorely afflicted husband. The funeral was held Thursday afternoon at the house. Rev. Dr. Watson officiated.

His windows are dressed in a unique manner, displaying the magazine, and prominent in the foreground is the check he received in the June contest. The store was photographed last Saturday, and here's hoping the news company a first prize.

The service tomorrow morning at St. John's church will be in charge of Dr. Horatio Grey of Boston, who will preach and administer the Sacrament. Dr. Grey and his sister are guests at the Robbins Spring hotel.

The family of Wendell E. Richardson left Friday for a vacation at Ogunquit, Me.

The family of A. L. Churchill of 185 Massachusetts avenue left the first of the week for a short stay at their cottage at Plymouth.

The firm of Le Baron and Johnson has lately completed a compressed air fire-alarm plant in Greenfield. It is a noteworthy fact that Messrs. Johnson and Le Baron have installed the only successful fire-alarm systems of this character, which are in operation in this country. Some six years ago they put in the one which has worked and is working so well in Arlington. This is the oldest one, and from it and experiments made upon it, they have devised many improvements in the two later systems. Two years ago they set up the second one in Lewiston, Me. The plant in Greenfield is the largest and most extensive of the three. Mr. Johnson returned home from his labors only last Saturday.

Next week Wednesday a salad supper will be given by the Arlington Line Mission, in the pursuance of the object which has been before the mission for some time, the securing of a sufficient sum of money whereby to erect a new mission building.

Mrs. Darling, Mrs. Fernald, Miss Adelaide Hoyt, Miss Lottie Lovering and Miss Laura Rose form the committee, which has the supper in charge.

Last Saturday there arrived in the family of Patrick Breen of Lake street a bouncing boy of some dozen pounds or more, who was baptized "Anthony Charles," Monday, at St. Agnes church, by Fr. Maloney.

Residents in the vicinity of the ice-houses have been complaining for some time of the bad and unhealthy odors which at times have pervaded the neighborhood. The cause is said to be the unloading of quantities of fertilizer. With the wind in the right direction the smell becomes actually a nuisance.

Miss Haberman will not leave town on her vacation until September.

Charles Lothrop and Miss Lorna Russell, who are soon to be married, will live in their new house on Davis avenue.

Thomas M. Kenny, formerly of Arlington, but now a resident of Baltimore, Md., has recently issued a book of poems entitled "Two Graves, or the Blue and the Gray and Other Poems." Mr. Kenny will be remembered by the older people of Arlington as a pupil in the old High street grammar school, 45 years ago. A copy of his book is in Robbins library. W. E. Wood is in Chicago on business.

Miss Angie Dinsmore will return Monday from a three weeks' vacation in Yarmouth, N. S.

Rev. Dr. and Mrs. Watson are home from their vacation. The Baptist brethren are to worship in the Congregational church during August, their pastor, Dr. Watson, officiating.

Messrs. LeBaron and Johnson had Arlington friends with them at Greenfield, among whom was E. S. Farmer, during their stay there while installing the fire alarm system. A bountiful supper was part of the program.

The above firm is to place a similar, though much larger, plant in Stoneham.

Dr. Yale returned Wednesday from his visit to his home in Vermont.

M. C. Taylor, treasurer of Fowler's Arlington Mills, resides at 8 Water street.

Parker and Taylor are from Littleton, N. H., and both business men of experience. Arlington wheat meal and all that goes to make muscle and brain will be the staple product of the mills. The new dam is being completed, so that soon every wheel will be buzzing. See advertisement in this issue.

The Boat club ball team will play no more games until September. Last Saturday's game with Talbot, Richardson & Talbot resulted in 6 to 2 in favor of the visitors. Harold Wood pitched the greater part of the game, being relieved at the end by Twombly.

Special Officer Daniel M. Daley of the park commission has been putting in some good work of late in the contest with the gypsy moth.

Oswald Yeames begins today his two weeks' vacation, which he will spend at Annisquam and Nahant.

Misses Constance and Mabel Yeames are at Nahant for a few days. Charles Flanders of the telephone station entered in the half-mile at the working boys' games at Combination park last Saturday.

Wednesday forenoon a band of gipsies passed through Arlington, some over the Heights, others by trolley. A unique company they were, and interesting as a racial study, since they retain nearly or quite all of their ancestral traits. It is supposed by some that the originals of these people came from Egypt, but this supposition is erroneous, as India is the birthplace of the real gypsy.

ARLINGTON HEIGHTS.

Mrs. Caroline E. Holmes, who died Tuesday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. J. Q. Cate, 1530 Massachusetts avenue, was born in Sharon, May 8, 1813. She was at the time of her death, 89 years and nearly three months old. She leaves three children. Her husband died in 1843. Mrs. Holmes has been a resident of the Heights for the past six years, during all of which time she has attended the old Cambridge Baptist church, of which she was a member. She had enjoyed excellent health until within two weeks of her demise, and was in full possession of her faculties. The funeral was held yesterday afternoon at the house, Prof. George F. Whittemore officiating. The interment was in the Cambridge cemetery.

Dr. Bisbee delighted the audience at Park avenue church Sunday morning with a very able sermon.

To-morrow morning Rev. Mr. Taylor will exchange pulpits with Rev. Charles H. Washburn of Maynard.

All were glad to have Dea. William Lloyd lead the devotional meeting Friday evening of last week.

Mrs. Margaret L. Taylor and family will spend the month of August in Lancaster, Mass.

The attendance at Park Avenue church thus far during the summer has been large for the season. Services will be held as usual throughout the vacation time.

Edward A. Nicoll took charge of the Sunday school last Sunday, the superintendent, Minot A. Bridgman, being at Bayville for a rest.

Mr. Taylor may be called west. He has just received word of the death of his younger brother in Auckland, New Zealand, who was on his way to Australia for a rest.

Married.—July 29, in Boston, Peter Frank Carmier to Margaret Georgina Doherty, by Rev. John G. Taylor.

Charles Cutter Lothrop to Grace Lorna Russell, at the parsonage, July 30. Mr. Cutter is in the engineers' department, Arlington.

Rev. Mr. MacCombe, of Boston, preached an able sermon at the Baptist church Sunday morning.

Rev. Herbert Pinkham, son of the late George Pinkham, has accepted a call to the Baptist church, Paris, Me.

William J. Doane, who is with the Crescent Cash Grocery, and his brother-in-law, Edwin Silver, of the firm, Priest & Silver, Somerville, spent Wednesday down the harbor, on the fishing steamer, King Philip. Mr. Doane is an expert fisherman, experienced in catching all kinds of fish, from a sardine to a whale, and had no difficulty in taking the twenty-one dollar prize offered for the largest fish caught. Messrs. Doane and Silver are so delighted with their day's outing that they advise any one desiring the pleasure of a day's fishing to go with Capt. Dickson on the King Philip.

Many complaints are being made because of the foul stench coming from the fertilizers that are being dumped at the depot from surrounding towns.

The veteran firemen's drum corps has been reorganized with Dennis Reardon as leader. This corps has four fifes and six drums.

G. W. White is putting in the cellar of the new residence of Mrs. Freeman on Appleton street.

Road repairs on the avenue have been continued this week. Considerable work has been done of late, and some is still going on at the Heights in the way of improvements and repairs upon the streets. There is yet more to be done, but it is not a bad investment for the town to make as good and well kept streets are a strong attraction to the prospective builder.

Bass Point, Nahant.

There is no question about the popularity of Bass Point as a summer resort, for in spite of the fact that the weather has been anything but the kind to drive the people to the seashore, this resort has been well patronized. This is due to the fact in a great measure that there are so many and such varied pleasures and attractions at Bass Point that one almost forgets entirely about the weather while enjoying a day's outing at this picturesque spot by the ocean. Now that the dog days of August are almost here, there is no better place to escape the persecutions of Old King Humidity than at Bass Point. The sail from Boston to Bass Point is a delightful outing and prepares the visitor for the many pleasures in store for him at this popular resort. There are band concerts afternoon and evening by the Boston Marine band, free dancing in the pavilion of the Bass Point house, excellent vaudeville entertainment at Shay's Show house, an interesting collection of birds, animals and reptiles at the Florida "Zoo," and many other attractions. At the Bass Point house can be had the famous Nahant shore dinners for which Bass Point has been noted for years, and a trip to Bass Point is hardly complete without one. All who are in search of healthful recreation and pleasure should take a trip to Bass Point, Nahant, via the Nahant line. The boats leave Lincoln wharf, foot of Battery street, beside the North ferry every ninety minutes, and it is one hour's sail to Bass Point.

LEXINGTON LOCALS.

The town meeting to be held next Monday night, has been called for the purpose of discussing and acting upon three articles, as set forth in the warrant. The first article to be taken up will be that which calls for the appropriation of funds for the completion and furnishing of the new high school building, for grading the grounds around it, and for the borrowing of the money needed to carry out these purposes. The second article relates to the sanitary condition of the Hancock school house; the town is to be asked to provide better sanitation. Under the third article will also be considered the sale of the school house on School street. The meeting will be held as usual in the town hall at half-past seven o'clock.

W. W. Rowse won the ping pong tournament at Old Belfry, defeating E. C. Stone in the finals 6-2, 6-3. The first match of the Old Belfry club in the tennis league tournament is expected to be held next Saturday afternoon, with the Belmont team. Last week Friday, Timothy Kineen, farmer, sent one of his men, by name T. Lomas Walker, to Boston with a two-horse team for a load of brewery grain. He gave the man $8 also, to pay for the food. The next day, as man and team both failed to return, Mr. Kineen reported the matter to Chief Franks, and the police set out to find the team. Trace of the man was found at Austin and Stone's, where he was said to have enjoyed the afternoon performance. Later telephone messages from the Cambridge police brought the information that the team was to be had at the University stables at Harvard square. Horses and wagon were recovered, but nothing further has been heard from Walker and the $8. He is said to have escaped at one time from the Boston insane asylum, and was in Cuba during the Spanish war.

William Kniley was in court last Monday. He was put on probation for two months.

Delfino's case came up yesterday, but too late to be reported in this issue. Dacey is able to be about again.

Mr. and Mrs. Hammon Reed have returned from Oakledge.

Another new flight of steps has been put in at the Baptist church.

The trolley ride to Forrest Glen park, which was to have been enjoyed by members of the Women's Relief corps, failed to come off Thursday.

The party, some forty or fifty, went to Marblehead instead. The ladies had made arrangements with the Lexington and Boston road for a special car to take them, starting at 9 o'clock Thursday morning. Quite late Wednesday evening Supt. Greene was notified that the party would not go as planned, but that the trip was to be postponed one week, and he therefore called off the arrangements he had made with the other roads over which the car would have to pass. But at a little past 8 Thursday morning further word was sent in that the corps had decided to go after all. Because of the short time and still more on account of the heavy traffic, due to the league muster at Lowell, it was impossible for the ladies to obtain their car, and they therefore went to Marblehead instead.

A party of Cambridge people had a picnic on Hancock street last Sunday, and some disturbance was made. There were several other picnics in the environs of the town the same day.

Some complaints anent these same picnics and the trespassing of the people composing them, upon private property, have been made of late. The police force is handicapped in the matter, by the fact that in most cases the land is not posted. If the property holder will but post his land, the officers of the law can easily and effectively settle the matter for him by making a few arrests and securing convictions of trespassing.

Letters recently received from Miss Margaret Tupper give a vivid description of a day's outing in the Nova Scotian woods.

Surveyors have been at work the past week laying out a road on the Valle property in North Lexington. The land is to be opened up for building.

A parish reunion will be held by St. Brigid's church late in September, after the return of Fr. Kavanaugh.

The funeral of William J. Neville of Massachusetts avenue, who died at his home last Tuesday, was held at 9:30 o'clock, yesterday morning, in St. Brigid's church. Solemn high mass of requiem was observed, the service being conducted by Fr. Fennersey, assisted by Fr. Ryan of the Union square church in Somerville and Fr. Peterson of the Brighton seminary. The burial was in Concord. The deceased was born in Lexington nearly 50 years ago, being at the time of his death 49 years, 5 months of age. He leaves a wife and four children.

Herbert G. Pratt of Everett was found, on Massachusetts avenue, Thursday afternoon, at about four o'clock, acting in a strange manner, and the police were notified and asked to attend to him. It was discovered by Officer McGuire that he was violently insane. From cards and papers found in his pockets after being taken to the police station, he was identified as being a locomotive fireman on the eastern division of the Boston & Maine. The addresses of his father in Everett, his wife in Boston, and his brother in Somerville were also found upon his person, and they were all summoned to Lexington to look after him. Laboring under the hallucination that he was upon a train, from which he ought to jump, and under the excitement therefrom he was restrained with great difficulty, at times, from injuring himself, by throwing himself about. Means were taken to quiet him and a physician called from Boston, whither he was taken on a late train. Overwork and heat are said to be responsible.

St. Brigid's lawn party, which came off as scheduled last Saturday afternoon and evening was quite successful, not only as an occasion of enjoyment, but also from the financial point of view as well. Just how much the net profits are has not yet been determined, but the affair is said to have realized a goodly sum, and this is evidenced by the fact that everything in the eatable and drinkable line was sold out in the course of the affair. A good sized crowd attended, in spite of the rather threatening weather, which fortunately did nothing worse than threaten, and everybody had a good time. The sports, which were held practically as planned, were greatly enjoyed both by spectators and by participants. The ball game and tug-of-war had to be omitted, because the Knights of Columbus were unable to appear and the apparatus for the tug could not be obtained. The egg race for young ladies was a novelty, and was won by Mrs. Peter Kineen of West Somerville. Miss Leary won the 100 yard dash for girls. All the events were in charge of Fred Spencer, Bartlett Harrington, Timothy McCarthy, and Dennis Collins. The grounds were beautifully illuminated in the evening by Japanese lanterns and electric lights, and were further adorned with bunting and by the various booths and tables where candy, ice cream, cake, coffee and all the other good things to eat and drink were for sale. An orchestra from Woburn furnished music, and there was dancing both in the afternoon and evening. Much credit is due to Mr. Spencer for the excellence of the decorations and arrangements which were in his charge. Miss Edith Cox returned from her vacation Monday.

Civil War Incident.

In connection with the article in the Sun relating an incident of the Battle of Kennesaw Mountain, Georgia, in 1864, when Colonel W. H. Martin, of the First Arkansas Regiment, gave the order to his men to stop firing, and hoisted a white handkerchief on a stick that the Federals in his front might remove some of their wounded men from a burning woods, Mrs. Susan B. Hull, of No. 1020 Cathedral street, recounts an interesting bit of history.

The First Arkansas Regiment was composed largely of students of St. John's College, at Little Rock, and was offered by the professors and instructors of the college. The First Colonel of the regiment was Mrs. Hull's brother, Colonel John Baker Thompson, who had been President of the college, and who afterwards fell at the battle of Shiloh. The First Arkansas was encamped near Fredericksburg when the first battle of Manassas, or Bull Run, opened. The command was ordered to the field, and it made the march in remarkably good time, winning words of praise from General Magruder. The men were not allowed to halt on the march, the roads were dusty and the weather warm, and they suffered terribly from thirst. When the battle-field was reached the command was thrown into the forefront of the fighting. Almost directly in front of the regiment was a spring of cool water, completely covered, however, by the guns of a Federal battery. This tempting spring, so near and yet so far, was exceedingly tantalizing to the thirsty men, and finally, when human nature could stand it no longer, two young boys, both under sixteen, whose names, unfortunately, have been lost in the flight of time, volunteered to get some water from the spring. With a lot of canteens strung over their shoulders the two young heroes started on their perilous journey. As soon as they came in range of the Federal battery it opened on them, and a perfect hail of canister and grape swept the field. The two lads reached the spring uninjured, and quickly filled the canteens, while their comrades watched with breathless interest, expecting every moment to see them struck down. Suddenly, as if by magic, the fire of the battery ceased. Then, as the boys started on their return to the regiment an officer on horseback rode out from between the guns of the battery, and lifting his hat, waved it to the boys, while a hearty cheer broke from the throats of the cannoneers. The officer had discerned the mission of the lads and given orders to stop firing. The cheer was responded to by the thirsty Confederates, and a few minutes later they were pouring the refreshing water down their dusty throats.

Possibly at Kennesaw, when the men and boys of the First Arkansas Regiment saw the unfortunate wounded boys in blue in danger of a horrible death in the burning woods, they remembered the incident of the first great battle of the war.—Baltimore Sun.

"A Mud Fall."

Waterfalls are plentiful, but a "mud fall" is less common. In "Mount Omi and Beyond, a Record of Travel on the Thibetan Border," Mr. Archibald Little describes such a fall, upon which he came, and under which he had to pass in his travels.

A sort of recess in the mountainside, apparently scooped out by the river, was filled by a huge whirlpool, into which from above came a steady fall of rocks. For at the back of the recess a mud fall tumbled over the cliff, here, perhaps, a thousand feet high, bringing down with it a constant stream of rocks, which bounded over the narrow footway and then down the lower slope with a splash into the boiling river.

We sat down on the rock at the bottom and watched the spectacle. We had been told beforehand of all sorts of impossible dangers, especially since the heavy rains, but we were not prepared for running the gauntlet of such a cannonade as this. Never having seen anything of the kind in our previous experience of mountain countries, we should much have liked to climb up the mountain side, had that been possible, and investigate the source of this extraordinary stream, which flowed on with a steady persistency that fascinated our gaze. But unfortunately we could not afford to loiter by the way and miss our daily stages.

Presently some coolies came along, and we watched with intense interest how they would pass the fall. The path was not a foot wide, and in fact was only retained as a path at all by the traffic over it, by which a way was trodden in the shaly slope as fast as it dribbled away. A big rock lined the inside of the track on one side of the fall, and under the lee of this the men crouched. They watched for an exceptionally heavy shower and when this was over made a bolt for it. This maneuver was repeated by each individual, and he was greeted by the laughter of his companions as he successfully ran the gauntlet. The stones were all angular, and varied in size from that of a walnut to that of a pumpkin, while the great height from which they fell rendered them doubly dangerous.

We sat for nearly an hour watching before we made up our minds to venture, and I should certainly not then have had the courage to do so had we not seen the natives pass with impunity. We went on at last and stood under the sheltering rock at the very edge of this novel cascade. The muddy, stone-laden stream made a loud, rattling, grating noise as it carried the smaller stones along with it; the larger fragments came bounding down in huge heaps as they crashed by. Waiting for a bigger mass than usual to go by, we made the run and all got safely over.

It was literally a rock cascade, for there was very little water in the stream, and that quite shallow.

Our pony jumped across without any difficulty, but an invaluable watchdog got panic-stricken when he felt the ground moving beneath his feet and crouched down. I was behind, and was able to catch him up and save him from death.

Rescuing a Cat.

At the risk of his life, William Clynes, of St. Louis, climbed a flagpole seventy-five feet high to rescue a helpless cat. This piece of heroism, reported among the lesser events in the daily news column, had no motive but sympathy with a dumb animal in distress.

Three days before, the cat had run up the tall flagstaff in Carr Park in her pursuit of a sparrow. When she was within three feet of him, the sparrow flew away. Then the cat, instead of turning back, continued to climb until she reached the golden ball at the top of the pole, and this, too, she surmounted.

After a brief rest she tried to descend. Then her feet slipped, and she made the discovery that her claws, although excellent for climbing, head up, were useless when she put her weight on them head down. The rotundity of the ball or fright at the elevation seemed to deprive her of the power to descend backward; so she sat clutching the ball at the top of the swaying pole, and cried piteously.

Through all of one night of misery, through the following day, and then through another night she clung, cold and hungry, to her narrow perch. On the third day a park keeper and a policeman tried to reach her. The policeman climbed forty feet and was then obliged to give up. "Can't some one save the poor creature?" he asked sympathetically, as he slid down.

Then William Clynes, a tinner in a stove factory, pulled off his coat and started up the pole. Foot by foot he went, until he reached the point, forty feet above the ground, where the light topmast was spliced on. Up this thin, swaying stem, which to the people below looked like a reed, and which bent and trembled under Clynes's weight, he slowly worked his way.

Once, when near the top, he slipped back a few feet. The crowd gathered below shivered, and many of the spectators called to him to come down. But he only gripped the pole the harder with his shins and slowly worked his way up, until he was only ten feet from the cat, five feet, two feet. A moment later he had gained the top, and wrapping his legs and one hand firmly about the slender staff, he reached the other hand over the gilt ball, and gently picked the cat from her place of danger. Then he slid down the pole to the ground, where he stood a moment for the crowd to inspect the cat before he took her off to get her some milk.

Had a Raging Bear For a Passenger.

Samuel Aftergut, a butcher of the Potrero, had an experience with a young cinnamon bear yesterday afternoon which, he says, has forever cured him of his taste for bear meat. He spent the most uncomfortable two hours of his life hauling a raging, demented bear around the streets in his wagon, and begging somebody to kill it before it killed him or scared him senseless.

Aftergut has, or rather had, until yesterday, a friend named "Billy" Maul, who conducts a resort known as "The Arbor," out near the Chutes. A long time ago a hunter gave Billy a bear cub, and for the amusement of his patrons Billy raised the cub till it developed a good size and a bad temper. Finding it had become a pest to him Billy made his friend, the butcher, a present of the troublesome animal and Aftergut hauled him away in his wagon with a stout rope tied around the brute's neck.

Deprived of its freedom and apparently frightened at the jarring ride in the wagon, poor Bruin suddenly became violently demented. He raged and tugged at the rope, screamed in frenzy in his effort to get at his captor, and turned the wagon bed into a pile of debris. The butcher soon became heartily sick of his bargain, as crowds of curious people, attracted by the howls of the bear, followed him through the streets.

Finding at last that he could neither cure his bear nor rid himself of his unwelcome presence, Aftergut drove to the Hall of Justice and besought Captain Birdsell to shoot the brute and end its misery. Bruin wailed and raged with foaming mouth at the mob of policemen and court officials who came to view his dementia from a respectful distance, till finally Sergeant Atkinson stood close to the bear and fired a shot into his brain.

Great was the butcher's relief when the death struggles of his "pet" ceased. The carcass, which he had intended originally to sell to a Chinese delicatessen store, he carried off to the bonnyard. But he vows vengeance on his erstwhile friend Billy Maul.—San Francisco Chronicle.

NATURE IN JULY.

Wilson H. Fay.

"Fling care by and flit with me into the woods where the wild things be."

On a morning in July when the air is perfumed by flowers and new mown hay it is pleasant to walk in the woods and fields. As we make our way through a field we are aware of the pungent odor of the daisies, the nignonne-like perfume of the wild grape blossoms, and moist fragrance of the lichens, covering stonewall and tree bole. The groundnut clammers among the stone heaps, its purple racemes joined with the white clusters of clematis. The pale, sweet-scented flowers of the milkweed are now in bloom. Around them hover the sulphur and brown monarch butterflies. Presently a bee alights on the plant and finding it sticky begins to feel about in all directions until his feet are caught in the fine little clefts at the base of the flowers. As he tries to draw them out, they only slip into a slot, at the end of which lies a mass of pollen, and when at last he does extricate himself he flies away with two of these pollinia, like tiny saddle bags dangling from his feet. Bumble bees and hive bees are sometimes found with a dozen pollen masses on a single foot, for often the bee does not escape, while struggling to do so, falls a prey to some beetle, spider or hungry bird.

While stopping to quench our thirst at a clear gurgling spring, there is a rustle in the underbrush and a woodchuck waddles into view with a clover stem in his mouth. Upon seeing us he does not run, but begins to eat some of the grass blades with a scratch of clover blossoms, to give all a sweet flavor, no doubt. After he has eaten the repast he sits bolt upright and begins to lick his fur, as a cat might, then having finished this task he drops upon all fours and disappears among some blueberry thickets.

A little further on we enter a ravine through which runs a brook on its way to the sea. The banks are fringed with hemlocks and white birch trees which form a sort of arch over the stream, and flaming cardinal flowers and wild roses look wondrously beautiful as they cast their reflections in the water. No sound disturbs the stillness except the merry laughter as the brook speeds on its way. The sighing of the wind among the tree boughs croons a lullaby, and a peaceful repose pervades the spot. The hum of bees among the blossoms sounds like distant fairy horns.

The brook's course leads us on and on, now a waterfall as it plunges over a ridge sprinkling us with its spray, now a placid pool in which trout can be seen swimming to and fro, and now smoothly flowing under a rustic bridge with green briar climbing over it, at last losing itself in a meadow where some wild iris gleam in the sunlight. Their erect sword-shaped leaves swaying in the wind resemble the brandishing of spear points and one might almost expect to see a crop of armed men spring from the soil as Jason did of old after sowing the dragon's teeth. The blue flowers of the pickerel weed and the arrow-head with its three-petaled flowers and arrow-shaped leaves make a beautiful picture on nature's canvas.

POOL.

There is no more exhilarating pastime to the man who uses his brain excessively than that of pool playing. It furnishes a radical change from the routine of constant thinking in regular channels for it brings into use a diversity of thoughts entirely foreign thereto and therefore recreative in character. Besides, it affords much wholesome physical exercise otherwise. Our pool-room at No. 491 Mass. Ave., Arlington, is a retreat for those who would, for a brief time, drive dull care away. It is kept in the most orderly manner and we solicit the patronage of gentlemen. We have no room for idlers or loungers of a social caste who can not mingle with gentlemen.

NOTES FROM WASHINGTON.

(Special Correspondence.)

Italian Immigrants—A larger number of immigrants entered the United States from Italy last year than from any other country, the total number of Italians entering our ports being 178,375, a gain of 42,379 over the number of the year before. Austria-Hungary ranked second. The number of immigrants from that country was 171,089, a gain of 58,599. The greatest increase was from Austria-Hungary, although the greatest percentage of increase was from Japan. Japanese to the number of 14,270 entered the United States last year, as against only 5293 in the year before. This record is surprising to the immigration officials from the fact that it was predicted more than a year ago that the emigration of Japanese from their native country to the United States would certainly decrease on account of measures taken by the home government to prevent emigration to the Occident. The character of immigration has changed greatly within the last few years. The Irish no longer predominate, the number coming from Ireland last year being only 29,138, as against 39,261 in the fiscal year 1901; and countries which formerly sent few of their people here are now predominant in our immigration statistics.

The Democratic Slogan—Chairman Griggs of the Democratic congressional campaign committee and Ben T. Cable, chairman of the executive committee, have returned to Washington from a consultation with Lewis Nixon, chairman of the finance committee, and this afternoon held a conference with Representative Richardson of Tennessee, the Democratic leader in the house and former chairman of the committee, regarding the outlook for the fall elections. Mr. Cable afterward visited the literary bureau of the committee and had a long talk with Secretary Edward. Before leaving for Chicago Mr. Cable said that "trusts and the tariff" would be the battle cry of the Democratic party in the fall campaign.

"Ship Finder"—Consternation has been caused among naval officers interested in the coming mock military operations on Long Island sound by the report that the army has ready for use an instrument by which the approach of a steel-armored battleship, cruiser or gunboat can be detected at a distance of 50 miles. This wonderful device is known as the "magnetic balance," and is a highly magnetized apparatus which must be immersed in sea water, preferably a short distance from the land, and connected with a float. The indicator is affected to a marked extent by any larger body of iron or steel in the same body of water, but may be gauged so that it will not be affected by the thin metal sheathing of a merchant vessel. A needle is drawn to point in the direction of the approaching vessel.

New Philippine Coins—Under authority of congress providing for the coinage of subsidiary coins for the Philippines, Secretary Root has approved the design submitted by Senor Figueras, a Filipino artist, whose drawings were received at the war department recently from Vice-Governor Wright in Manila. The new coins are to range in value from 10 cents to 50 cents in silver and from half a cent to 5 cents in copper. The work of coinage will probably be done in Philadelphia, the dies being cut at the Philadelphia mint. It was considered desirable that the coin bear some design easily recognizable by the natives, and at the same time convey an impression of American authority. The design submitted by Mr. Figueras is believed to combine both ideas.

Miss Taylor Will Fight—Miss Rebecca M. Taylor, the war department clerk who was dismissed from the government service on June 7 for writing letters criticizing President Roosevelt for his Philippines policy, has entered suit in the supreme court of the District of Columbia to compel Secretary Root to reinstate her. Justice Hagner issued a writ, returnable July 28, directing Secretary Root to show cause why Miss Taylor's plea should not be granted. Miss Taylor bases her fight for reinstatement upon the alleged violation of the civil service regulations by the secretary of war in ordering her dismissal and the alleged abridgement of her constitutional right of free speech.

McKinley Doctors' Fees—Secretary Cortelyou had a conference with Secretary Shaw in regard to the payment of doctors' bills and other expenses incident to the assassination of President McKinley. A lump appropriation of $45,000 was made by congress to cover these expenses, and Mr. Cortelyou, at the request of President Roosevelt, has taken personal charge of the bills. It was arranged that Mr. Cortelyou should make requisitions upon the treasury for the several amounts represented by the physicians' bills and other claims, and that these requisitions shall be honored without delay in the auditor's office.

Choate, ambassador to the court off St. James, and Whitelaw Reid, special ambassador to the coronation ceremonies, whether Mr. Reid should remain to represent the United States at the postponed coronation in August, Mr. Reid has informed the state department that unless some unforeseen reason should arise he will sail for home on July 26. CONGRESSMAN ALDRICH
ENDORSES THE TONIC, PERUNA

Says: "It Will Build Up a Depleted System Rapidly."

Hon. W. F. Aldrich, Congressman from Alabama, writes from Washington, D. C.: "This is to certify that Peruna, manufactured by The Peruna Medicine Co., of Columbus, O., has been used in my family with success. It is a fine tonic and will build up a depleted system rapidly. I can recommend it to those who need a safe vegetable remedy for debility."—W. F. Aldrich.

H. S. Emory, Vice-Chancellor and Master of Arms, K. P.'s, of Omaha, Neb., writes from 213 North Sixteenth street, the following words of praise for Peruna as a tonic. He says:

Catarrh of Stomach.
"It is with pleasure I recommend Peruna as a tonic of unusual merit. A large number of prominent members of the different Orders with which I have been connected have been cured by the use of Peruna of cases of catarrh of the stomach and head, also in kidney complaint and weakness of the pelvic organs."

"It tones up the system, aids digestion, induces sleep, and is well worthy the confidence of sufferers of the above complaints."—H. S. Emory.

Nervous Debility.
Everyone who is in the least degree subject to nervousness, sleeplessness, prostration, mental fatigue or nervous debility in any form, finds the hot weather of June, July and August very hard to bear, if not dangerous.

Ancient Iberian Temple.
Dr. Sieglin, professor of ancient history at the University of Berlin, has discovered during his recent tour in Southern Spain what is probably the oldest temple of the ancient Iberians, at the confluence of the Rivers Odiel and Rio Tinto, near Huelva. The temple was dedicated to the Goddess of the Lower World, and is connected with two caves, which are filled with debris.

Followed Their Mutual Bent.
"Those boys were alike as two peas and I hear they're much the same now."
"What business are they in?"
"One's a hypnotist and t'other's a commercial traveler."—Detroit Free Press.

The only safe course to take is to keep the blood pure, digestion good, and sleep regular. No remedy equals, in all respects, Peruna for these purposes. If the system is run down and weakened by catarrh, Peruna renovates and rejuvenates the nerves and brain.

A book on the catarrhal diseases of summer will be mailed to any address, upon request, by The Peruna Medicine Co., Columbus, Ohio.

The above testimonials are only two of 50,000 letters received touching the merits of Peruna as a catarrhal tonic. No more useful remedy to tone up the system has ever been devised by the medical profession.

A man not oed the small amount of food I was taking at breakfast and my evident dislike for eating. He said, "You need Ripans Tablets." That proved the description I ever received. My dyspepsia has disappeared and where before I could get only a few hours' sleep in the warm weather, Ripans Tablets also make my sleep refreshing so that I feel like going to work after resting.

READING THAT COUNTS.

The reading that counts is that by which the reader makes the thought of the writer his own. Have you ever noticed how many a man reads a newspaper? He will frequently skim over the headlines, when, if he finds in them nothing of a sensational or startling character "there is nothing in it." We know men who read the daily newspaper no more intelligently than were they to read it up side down. They know no more of it than through with their reading than they did when they began. And in the same way they read the magazine or book. The unfortunate truth about the whole matter is that these superficial readers do not understand reading, either as an art or as a natural gift, and yet they will insist: "there is nothing in the paper." One needs to have the patience of Job to get along with these fellows. There should be in all our public schools a daily exercise whereby the pupils would be required to read from the daily and weekly newspaper the current events of the day and all legitimate, instructive local items of the neighborhood. To read understandingly, one must know how to read. To get the sense out of a written paragraph, one must first have some common sense of his own. Dear man, read your newspaper right side up, and read the whole of it before you swear "there's nothing in it."

"OUR DAILY BREAD."

"Give us this day our daily bread" is a prayer that means something in these later times of trusts and concentrated wealth. Seldom, if ever before in the history of this country, has the cost of living been as exorbitant as now. We are quite aware that the cry is heard on all sides that business was never better than now, but what of it? Where is the advantage, if it takes all and more than the working man can earn to support himself and family? How does it happen that, with the business life of the country at its best, the industrial classes are put at their wit's end to determine just how they may comfortably feed and clothe those dependent upon them? The answer is to be found and found only in the wicked fact that the so-called "trust" has laid its miserly hands upon the very necessities of life, and so taken from the mouths of the working classes the essentials of their daily livelihood. This combination of wealth is being carried to such an extreme that it threatens the immediate future of the country. Just think of it! Three-tenths of one percent of the people own 70 percent of the national wealth, or one man out of 200 hundred controls $40 out of every $100 of the country's wealth, while the other 299 divide $30 among them. A few of the more wealthy families making up less than one percent of the people receive a larger income than the aggregate income of one-half of the American people. The smaller property holders constituting seven-eighths of the whole number of property holders throughout the entire country, only own one-eighth, and they tell of danger ahead. The danger is already upon us. The beef trust is only one of the monopolies of wealth. It has robbed and is robbing the poor man's table. The coal combination is born of the "Almighty dollar," and so it goes on to the end of the list. It may well be asked what are you going to do about it? That something will be done about it at a distant future, there can be no question. There is a point beyond which all human endurance will cease. The frequent strikes are substantially a war for the necessities and comforts of life. Men and women will not willingly starve to death. As a last resort they will fight that they and their children may have whereof to eat. The world owes every industrious man and woman a living, and this living they will somehow secure, all of which is their god-given right. What are we to do about it, do you ask? Break away, we reply, from all party lines and give political position to those men only who have the honesty and the courage to "kill out root and branch this monopoly of wealth." Make the "trust" answerable to law. Let the penitentiary stare that man in the face who shall dare rob the poor man's table, that he may add another dollar to his ill-gotten spoils. Let us no longer popularize the trust business because the dealer therein gives a million dollars to found a college or to erect an elegant church edifice. The "trust" should be placed on the list of highway robberies and should be dealt with accordingly. Wealth should become the servant of the people and never their master." Give us this day our daily bread," carries with it the scriptural right to secure it.

Arlington, July 29, 1902.

Dear Enterprise—We must tell you readers of a delightful ride we took the other morning with Willard C. Schouler of Pleasant street up to his farm in Lexington. In an easy-going carriage and behind Mr. Schouler's horse, "Dainty," we made our way along what is known as Spring Lane road, leading off to the right of Pleasant street. This road is nothing other than a picturesque country highway, with all its rustic environments. There came the open field, with the pasture and the woodland, so that in making our journey along this lane we could easily imagine that we were hundreds of miles away from the big, bustling city. We were glad to learn that within two miles of Arlington Centre, and within 20 minutes of Boston, one may betake himself as essentially to the country as though he were to pack his grip-sack and steam away for a 100 miles or more into the back country. It frequently happens that one wanders far and wide from home to find that which is almost within hand's reach of his own door. At any rate, Spring Lane road is a country highway along which one may think in poetry. For a little way our ride took us along the Concord turnpike, which demonstrates the mathematical fact that a straight line is the nearest distance between any two given points. Along and on either side of this great highway with scarcely a bend or a crook, come those willows of many years' growth. As one looks down this long stretch of avenue shaded by the willows he has pictured to him a line of perfection worthy of the artist. The objective point of our ride was Mr. Schouler's Lexington farm, as we have already stated. The farm comprises somewhere about 75 acres of tillage, pasture and woodland. The barn is 108 feet by 40, with a large annex. Mr. Schouler has so added to the barn and made over and remodeled it, that it is modern in all its appointments. It is well lighted and well ventilated, for he it known that in these days of improved agriculture it has become a "condition precedent" that the live stock shall have air and sunshine. While men and women may be willing to bury themselves in the shade, the cattle on a thousand hills need and will have the sunshine. Mr. Schouler is much interested in the cultivation of the fields, and he makes a study of it. He knows the composition of the soil, and he furnishes what it lacks. He well understands what crops are the better adapted to certain soils—in a word he farms it on an intelligent plan. We are glad to write this much of Mr. Schouler as a tiller of the soil. While it is true he does not do a great part of the manual labor, still he knows in a scientific way how it should be done. He knows about every detail of the work and his broad acres, and so it is that he makes farming pay. From his Arlington home Mr. Schouler is some 40 minutes' ride and he visits it daily. Plautus says, "Each man works on his own farm," and fortunate would it be were the saying literally true. Mr. Schouler, while he lives in one of the suburbs of Boston, still wisely keeps in touch with the country through his love of farm life. "Let it please thee to keep in order a moderate-sized farm, that so thy garden may be full of fruits in their season," so says Horace. We are under many obligations to Mr. Schouler for that enjoyable ride and visit to his Lexington farm.

NANTASKET POINT.

When visiting Nantasket Beach don't fail to call and see D. O. Wade at Nantasket Point and get one of his famous shore dinners. It is the best dinner that is served at the beach and only costs fifty cents. Mr. Wade is the oldest hotel keeper at Nantasket and still holds the reputation he made many years ago of getting up the best fish and clam dinner on the southeastern coast of Massachusetts. Owing to the state taking his property at Nantasket proper Messrs D. O. Wade, C. G. Grant and several well known citizens of Hull have purchased Nantasket Point and have built a first class hotel with large veranda seating several hundred, also giant roller coaster, the largest in the world. Flying horses and the finest dancing pavilion on the beach there are many other attractions such as shooting galleries, theatres, etc.

Mr. Al Boyden of Roxbury is building an automobile race track and see-saw diving bell which is new to the beaches of the east and only a stone's throw from D. O. Wade's hotel.

If you are looking for a day's outing with a first-class dinner take steamer Harlem from 400 Atlantic avenue, near Rowe's wharf elevated station, fare 25 cents for the round trip and enjoy an outing at Nantasket Point.

Tremont Theatre.

"Prince of Pilsen," which next Monday enters upon its 12th week at the Tremont theatre, Boston, is a distinctly delightful entertainment. The book has all the elements of success, and theatre-goers have not been slow to recognize the charm of Luders' bright and pretty music, as well as Pixley's wit. Already the remarkable run of "The Burgomaster" last summer is distanced, and from the present outlook, there seems to be nothing to hinder "The Prince of Pilsen" from making a brand new record for longevity, as it is more than likely that this merry comedy opera will remain where it is until the opening of the regular season the middle of September. There have been some few changes in the cast since the opening, but the newcomers—Henrietta Lee, Edgar Norton, George DeLong and Jeannette Bapard—have all met with popular favor. The mise en scene is delightful, the color scheme being particularly attractive. This, with the pretty music and beautiful women, has had much to do with the success which has attended the present run of "The Prince of Pilsen."

A report from the Haynald Observatory, in Hungary, says that Professor Schreiber has invented an electric apparatus that records the approach of a thunder storm. A detector, similar in its action to that used in the Marconi telegraph system, registers the electric wave set in motion by a flash of lightning, the impulse being communicated to a pen connected with a disk moved by clockwork. When the pen makes its record a bell is rung, the vibration of which rests the coherent. The instrument gives notice of a storm 20 miles away, and on one occasion it recorded one that was raging at a distance of 68 miles.

It was determined long ago that the blue color of the sky is due to the scattering of the short waves of light—which are the blue waves—by the invisible dust-particles that float in the upper atmosphere. Nearer the earth the dust-particles are larger and their greater size makes them scatter all the rays of light alike. This, according to an article in a late number of a scientific journal, is what gives to the clouds the brilliant fringes that we often see. These coarser dust-particles seem to be attracted by the clouds, near which they accumulate, and it is the refraction of the rays of light by them that gives the clouds their fringes.
